BY D.C. HARVILL
A temporary classroom at Hancock North Central was destroyed by fire sometime late Tuesday evening or Wednesday morning.

The metal building, which housed an 11th grade American history class, was discovered burned at about 7 a.m. Wednesday by the school's principal, Donald Hillman, when he reported to work.

Hillman, who lives across the street from the school, said he didn't notice anything out of the ordinary when he arrived home at approximately 11 p.m. the night before.

"There is a janitor at the school until about 10 p.m. and another comes in at about 6 a.m.; neither of them noticed anything," he said.

The fire is under investigation by Hancock County Fire Marshal Jay Marsh and Deputy State Fire Marshal David Dry.

"We spent the day out there Wednesday, but we haven't determined the cause, yet," Marsh said.

The fire comes on the heels of allegations last week by a group of parents of Hancock students who claim fire safety at the school is inadequate.

Kiln man stable after being shot

BY D.C. HARVILL
A Kiln man remains in intensive care after undergoing surgery for gunshot wounds, allegedly inflicted by his brother.

Renee Dunhurst, 39, was shot about 11:15 p.m. Wednesday with a shotgun loaded with buckshot in the parking lot of The Broke Spoke, a Kiln drinking establishment, according to Hancock County Sheriff's Investigator Nathan Hoda.

"We think two shots were fired," Hoda said.

Cleon Dunhurst, 32, has been charged with aggravated assault in the shooting, the investigator said.

Renee Dunhurst was taken to Hancock Medical Center by a friend and was later transferred to Memorial Hospital in Gulfport where he underwent surgery for wounds to the head and neck. Pellets also were removed from his arms, hands and chest.

He is in stable condition and should be removed from intensive care in "one or two days," a hospital spokesman said Friday.

Cleon Dunhurst, who had reportedly been beaten, was also hospitalized. He was reported in stable condition Friday at Hancock Medical Center.

Hoda is in charge of the investigation.

Report rules out alcohol, drugs in Smith crash

The results of toxicology tests made after Fifth District Representative Larkin Smith and Pilot Chuck Vierling were killed in a plane crash show that the deaths were not related to alcohol, drugs or carbon monoxide poisoning.

Perry County Coroner Randall Carnahan stated this week that the tests showed only normal levels of carbon monoxide and no drugs or alcohol in either of the men.

Smith and Vierling died Aug. 13 when the single-engine plane in which they were riding crashed in a remote section of DeSoto National Forest near the Perry County community of Janice, about 13 miles south of New Augusta.

Smith, a former Harrison County sheriff and a resident of Long Beach, was returning to the coast after an appearance at a youth baseball event in Hattiesburg.

The final report on the investigation into the two deaths may be ready before Jan. 1, according to Jorge Prellezo, regional director of the National Transportation Safety Board's Miami office.

He stated that a radar report which has not yet been received might provide more information about the crash, which occurred after the plane had veered about 10 miles off its course. Weather and possible aircraft malfunctions have already been ruled out as possible causes of the crash.

The National Transportation Safety Board has determined, however, that Vierling was flying by visual flight rules rather than instruments, using visual landmarks to determine the plane's course.

Smith's death, which occurred during his first term as congressman, created a political chain reaction which gave Hancock County a new congressman and a new state senator.

The plane crash's effects first resulted in a special election in which the runner-up to Smith, Gene Taylor of Bay St. Louis, was elected as his successor.

Taylor resigned the District 46 State Senate seat he held at the time, causing a need for a second special election.

Last week, former Bay St. Louis mayor Victor Frankiewicz Jr. was elected to that post. Frankiewicz said he expects to be sworn in some time this week.

Frankiewicz said Friday that he does not know if the ceremony will take place in Jackson or in Bay St. Louis, but said he would prefer to be sworn in here, if he can arrange it.

Holiday parade set for Dec. 7

Fountain named grand marshal

The Hancock County Chamber of Commerce, in cooperation with the Hancock County Board of Supervisors and the cities of Bay St. Louis and Waveland, is sponsoring its annual Christmas parade and tree lighting ceremony at 7 p.m. Thursday.

The parade will assemble at the corner of US-90 and Beach Boulevard, then will proceed down Beach to Main Street.

It ends at the Hancock County Courthouse, where the tree lighting ceremony will be conducted.

Special guest at the event will be musician Pete Fountain, who will serve as grand marshal of the parade.

In addition, local elected officials and other dignitaries will be on hand at the courthouse grounds for the arrival of Santa Claus and the tree lighting ceremony.

County won't pay legal costs in Diamondhead utilities dispute

BY DENA BISNETTE
The Hancock County Board of Supervisors has granted the recently formed Diamondhead Water and Sewerage District permission to begin eminent domain proceedings against Peter J. Casano—but those proceedings will not cost the county any money.

Casano owns Diamondhead's water and sewerage systems, the subject of controversy prior to the formation of the district. Some of the petitioners who asked the supervisors to help create the district several months ago had advocated taking over the utilities and running them as publicly owned, non-profit organizations.

Board Attorney Gerald Gex explained to the board members that eminent domain proceedings are probably the only that can happen if Casano will not agree to sell the utility systems to the district, but board members said they would approve use of eminent domain only at no cost to the county.

Casano, who withdrew a rate increase request from consideration by the Mississippi Public Service Commission in August with intentions of filing an updated version later, has reportedly agreed to meet with representatives of the utility district commission to discuss the matter further.

The board of supervisors is scheduled to meet again at 9 a.m. Thursday in the upstairs boardroom of the Hancock County Courthouse.

Among the circumstances in which the death sentence becomes a possibility are cases involving murders which occurred along with another crime.

Beebe taught business accounting at University of Southern Mississippi's Gulf Park campus in Long Beach and Delgado Community College in Slidell, La. His body was found in a Slidell motel room, but his car and about $300 in cash from his wallet were gone.

O'Laughlin, 36, was in Beebe's car when he was arrested in Malibu, Calif., two days after the murder. Police reported that he was also wearing the dead man's watch.

O'Laughlin was found to have escaped from a prison work gang in Cross City, Fla., about 12 hours before Beebe was killed. He was serving a life term plus 25 years after entering a guilty plea to murder and armed robbery charges in Miami in 1978. He also had a prior escape.

P.P.E.C. to sponsor 'Special Arts Festival'

BY DENA BISNETTE
Parents and Professionals for Exceptional Children will sponsor "A Very Special Arts Festival" from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. Tuesday, Dec. 5, at the Bay Senior High gymnasium.

The event is a participatory one, designed to allow special children to use various types of art medium. In addition, there will be more than a dozen demonstrations for the children to watch, said Linda Salaun and Ann Ladner, two of the organizers of the event.

"We'll have hands-on experience with different art forms, including sculpture, painting, crafts and even music," she said.

Some of the demonstrations P.P.E.C. is in the process of setting up for the event include karate, square dancing and ballet.

Activities already set up include T-shirt decorating, Christmas crafts including candy cane pine cone trees and wreaths, paper sculpture, sand painting, making key plaques, finger painting, face painting, making necklaces and a theatrical make-up demonstration. Music for the event will include a violin performance by the Mahler children, Pearl Peterman on guitar and Christmas music by Janet Wiggins and Pete Chapman.

Salaun said is trying to arrange a visit by Power 108.

Artists include Kat Fitzpatrick, doing portraits; Barbara Brodtmann and Nadine Stamm, both of whom paint; Rhonda Swilley, showing ceramics; and The Sea Coast Echo's cartoonist, Frank Richard.

Hancock County Retired Senior Volunteers Program members are helping with the event, as well as Hancock County Service League (formerly Junior Auxiliary), Darlene Underwood from the Hancock County Extension Service, Coast Electric, Princess Shoppe Teen Board.

A group of Bay Senior High art students have agreed to assist the participants as they work on various crafts.

Additional assistance has been provided by administrators of the Bay-Waveland

School District, who have arranged for buses to transport the students from each school to the gym for the event as well as providing facilities.

More volunteers to assist with the craft tables are needed. Last minute volunteers will be accepted at the festival, but anyone who wants to make prior arrangements may call Salaun at 467-7538 or Ladner at 467-6257.

Bag lunches will be provided at the high school cafeteria for the participants in the festival, with prices the same as regular school lunches.

The funds for the event are being provided by United Way. Several local dignitaries are expected to attend, including Bay St. Louis Mayor Edward Favre, who will be featured in an opening ceremony.

"We are trying to promote awareness of P.P.E.C. with this event, as well as provide an enjoyable learning experience for the children," Salaun said. "We're trying to help the parents of special students and widen the experiences of the students themselves."

SPECIAL MEETING

The Bay-Waveland School Board will hold a special meeting at 6 p.m. Monday at the Bay Senior High Library. The board will conduct discussion with the high school faculty.

Let's chase a White Rabbit to the Mad Hatter's party

My favorite books, when I studied English literature in college were "Alice in Wonderland" and its companion volume, "Through the Looking Glass," by Lewis Carroll.

Of course, by the time the "Alice" books become the subject of a college student's report, they are being examined as a parody of the British political system of the era in which they were written, instead of the wonderful children's stories they have become over time.

I suppose most people who read such a book would identify with Alice, the only character who resembled reality and wasn't based on a political figure.

Unfortunately, to me, the two characters who most resembled reality were the White Rabbit in "Wonderland" and the Mad Hatter in "Looking Glass."

The two of them had a lot in common with me and with other people I know. They both had problems with time. Time was too fast for the rabbit and not fast enough for the hatmaker.

White Rabbit was constantly running around worried that he was being late, which he was, and Mad Hatter had a dispute with Father Time, who then refused to work for him at all, and wound up where his watch stopped—stuck at tea time at a party where his guests were either asleep or making insane attempts to have a good time in a very dull situation.

There are times I feel very much like either the rabbit or the hatter.

I have, quite unintentionally, developed a little quirk about being late. I can be on time for professional appointments, unless my lateness is due to circumstances beyond my control, but if it's a personal matter I run 10 to 15 minutes late without fail.

It has become a habit I'm having difficulty breaking, so now I tell people to make my appointment for 15 minutes later than the time I actually intend to be there.

But, I still feel like White Rabbit, because in my mind, I know I'm still late. As a teen, I developed a horror of being late after having been that way as a younger child. (Of course, it never occurred to anybody to ask if I actually wanted to go wherever it was when I was being late, and I usually didn't.)

I also frequently feel a great deal like the Mad Hatter, particularly when I have arrived on time and am stuck waiting somewhere.

The feeling also occurs during some extremely routine newspaper assignments, in classes where the professor reads the book to his students and at certain parties where I have to be excruciatingly polite to people I hardly know because they are my husband's employers or something similarly important.

Time stops working for me; I want to curl up in a reasonably draft-free corner and take a nap like the dormouse in the teapot.

Or, I want to go mad like the March Hare and end my boredom by doing things that are somewhat socially unacceptable, like dancing to the elevator music or drawing pictures of windows with scenic views on the walls that don't already have the real thing.

Most of the time, I simply have to be like Alice, maintaining my politeness and good behavior while I'm struggling with time, hurrying to be somewhere I really don't have enough time to go anyway or thinking of all the things I could do with the time others are wasting for me.

I've read and used parts of several good pieces on time management but have yet to find one which is totally practical for me. It's a wonder to me that consultants are not more active about promoting individualized time management plans.

Maybe it would help some of the other people I know who have time management problems if they would accept that in everyone there is a little bit of White Rabbit, a little Mad Hatter or both. It helps me be less frustrated about time just to understand that.

Dear me, I'm late! I'm late for a tea party, so there's no more time to talk about time. See you next Sunday, if I'm on time.

Reflections

On Life

By Father Jerome LeDoux, SVD

Looking up, looking down

There it was: a young, foot-long snake, lying placidly on the huge, dried magnolia leaves directly ahead of me, blending into the leaves so well that it was virtually invisible to the casual eye. For reasons of camouflage and concealment, the serpent was content to lie there immobile, challenging my ability to notice it resting almost precisely where my foot-fall might strike it.

"Water moccasin?" I asked myself. "No, too light in color; plus, the markings are not right. Oh, copperhead, maybe," taking note of the strong copper tone of the banded skin.

I walked around the snake, observing the triangular head which betrayed the fact that it was a pit viper. Touching the head with a stick, I was satisfied that it was indeed a copperhead, a cousin of the moccasin and sometimes called the dry-land moccasin.

Sometimes we look up while we walk. Sometimes we look down. Sometimes we look all around. In this case, it was almost the roll of the dice that I happened to be looking down. Otherwise, I would have stepped on the snake or so close to it that one of my sandaled feet would have more than likely been bitten.

That copperhead was not a big one as copperheads go, and, therefore, not particularly toxic, although its poison would certainly cause a king-sized headache, not to mention terrible infection, pain, swelling and perhaps nausea and disorientation.

For the fleeting moment, I debated whether I should destroy it, in order to prevent anyone else from stepping on it by chance. "No," I thought instantly. "It will kill many mice and rats, and thereby serve us and nature well. No, it shall go free."

As the wary serpent slithered off, I reflected: "Besides, today is October 4, the feast of St. Francis of Assisi. Francis, that world-renowned lover of nature, would not have dreamed of harming this lonely little copperhead."

Despite the fact that my foot had nearly been punctured by the venomous fangs of the young copperhead, I had a warm, comfortable feeling in the knowledge that nature and I were somehow able to coexist without hurting each other.

Reminiscing about years gone by, hundreds of snakes ran before my mind's eye: hundreds of snakes which I had encountered at random in the wild, but much more the scores of snakes which we used to hunt and capture live as kids right on the spacious grounds at St. Augustine Seminary high school in Bay St. Louis.

What struck me above all was the fact that, in all these years, I had never had a sour moment with the venomous snakes nor with anything else in nature, save one nasty bout with poison ivy all the way back in 1954. "What a record!" I thought.

Then came the flip side. Contact with my fellow humans was the only relation in nature where disharmony and danger sometimes struck at me and the rest of my fellow travelers. "What an irony!" I reflected. "Wild, venomous creatures have been far less a threat to me than my domestic, rational fellow sojourners!"

Inevitably, I pondered yet more of the flip side: "If that is how some people have shown themselves to me, to what extent have I in my turn been more of a threat to my fellow humans than have the wild, venomous creatures around us?"

"Live and let live!" was said in a different, more powerful way by the Master himself: "Treat others the way you would have them treat you" (Mr. 7:12). This advice is most comforting both to little copperheads and to every other creature, including us.

"QUOTABLE QUOTES"

By Ellis C. Cuevas

I do not envy the motorists who have to drive through the rush traffic of New Orleans on Interstate 10. I left the New Orleans Airport at about 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday and found some of the headaches motorists face.

To begin with, it was raining very hard, and the vehicles were moving at various speeds, even having to stop at times.

It is a long way across the city from the airport, especially when it is raining, not to mention the accidents and breakdowns.

I saw the driver of a wrecker who must have had nerves of steel as he was hooking up to remove an accident vehicle.

Traffic was heading straight toward his wrecker and passing him on both sides as he went about his work of hooking up to the vehicle.

I just happened to be in the "wrecker lane." His wrecker was pointed in the wrong direction, and I had to wait until some gracious motorist gave me an opportunity to move into another lane.

Those folks who work in the city can have all of that rush hour traffic as far as I am concerned.

It seems there has been an increase in the number of persons using the Fitness Trail in front of Hancock Medical Center since Thanksgiving.

I guess too many of us stuffed ourselves with turkey and the trimmings and are now having to trim the waistline a bit.

I know I have put on a couple extra pounds, so I need to get back on a regular walking routine on a daily basis.

It is rather hard to do with the recent weather conditions and holidays, as I always seem to have something else to do.

See you at the fitness trail.

The Hancock County Chamber of Commerce's Morning Edition will be held Thursday, 7:30 a.m. at the Wheel Inn Restaurant in Bay St. Louis.

Pat Santucci, district manager for South Central Bell, will be the guest speaker.

Santucci will tell how the new 'Area Calling Plan' option works and the advantages it brings to telephone customers.

I am sure there are many merchants who are interested in the new program which was unveiled several weeks ago by South Central Bell.

This will be a good time for folks to find out just how the 'Area Calling Plan' really works.

Looking to the weeks ahead, the chamber's annual Christmas parade and tree lighting will be held on Thursday, December 7.

I know there will be many youngsters who will want to give Santa their requests in person.

The annual Hancock County Chamber of Commerce's banquet is scheduled for Friday, December 1 with Governor Ray Mabus as the featured speaker.

The event will be held at the Diamondhead Country Club beginning at 7 p.m. and Governor Mabus will be talking about his education reform package.

For further information about the banquet call the chamber at 467-9048.

WASHINGTON REPORT

By Senator Thad Cochran

Defense funding bill includes major projects in Mississippi

Senator Thad Cochran says the defense appropriations bill for 1990 includes funds for several major projects and programs in Mississippi, including the "Hurricane Hunters" aircraft and the Army Ammunition plant on the Gulf Coast. "I am pleased the House-Senate conference report includes these vital items," he said. Cochran, a member of the Senate Appropriations Defense panel, served on the conference committee.

The committee reached agreement on the conference report late Thursday, and Congress is expected to consider the measure when it returns next week from the Veterans Day weekend.

The FY 1990 funding includes $90 million for production of 180,000 rounds of projectiles at the Army Ammunition Plant near Picayune.

About $9.7 million is provided for the weather reconnai-sance aircraft at Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi that monitor hurricane activity in the Gulf of Mexico.

Cochran pointed out the bill also includes funding for shipbuilding programs, portions of which are expected to be done at the Ingalls shipyard in Pascagoula and Avondale's yard at Gulfport.

The Navy is being allocated $3.5 billion for five Arleigh Burke class guided missile destroyers, several of which Ingalls is expected to build. Avondale-Gulfport is expected to submit bids for a portion of the $250 million landing craft air cushion program.

The bill also includes funds for Hughes Aircraft's torpedo program, some which will be done at the company's Forest plant.

Overall, the bill provides nearly $300 billion for the nation's defense system and personnel at home and abroad.

A reminder from the Department of Public Safety

FROM THE SENATE

By Senator Trent Lott

Out with the earning test

Not long ago, a woman from Ridgeland, Miss. informed me by letter that she was losing her Social Security benefits. Her total monthly income is $821; $378 from Social Security and another $443 from a government annuity.

But that was not enough. "In order to survive I have had to return to work," she wrote. So why is she losing her benefits? Because she is working, answered the Social Security Administration. Unfortunately, this is a typical case for seniors between the ages of 62 and 70 who return to the workplace.

Under current law, social security beneficiaries under age 70 face sharp benefit reductions if their earnings exceed a specified amount. Those affected by the so called "earnings test" are permitted to earn $8,160 per year. Those earning more than this arbitrary amount receive a cut in benefits of $1 for every $2 earned in excess of the limit.

After contributing to the social security program for decades and reaching age 62, our seniors are presented with an unfair choice: eliminate virtually all significant earnings or face stiff cuts in the benefits to which they are otherwise entitled. In my opinion, this is a decision our seniors should not be forced to make.

Beyond this, the earnings limit mandates a terribly inequitable tax policy. Those who earn in excess of the limit face a federal marginal tax rate in excess of 70 percent. When you add state and local taxes, the marginal rate is even higher. This kind of taxation is simply misguided and something Congress hardly intended to impact the elderly.

Eliminating the earnings test would also end the inequity under current law of allowing full benefits to social security recipients with unlimited income from pensions and investments, while those who earn just $8,160 a year face cuts.

I am cosponsoring legislation in the U.S. Senate to change these rules. Senate Bill 9 would phase out the retirement earnings limit. Under this proposal, the earning limit would be increased by $3,000 a year beginning in 1990 and eliminated entirely by 1995 for beneficiaries above age 65. Similar measures have advanced through the committee stage, but were later dropped before final passage.

This idea makes good sense. It would provide an incentive for retaining the talents, skills and experience of the seniors in the workforce at a time when such labor is so desperately needed.

A recent U.S. Labor Department study, conducted by the Hudson Institute (Workforce 2000), concluded that the workforce is growing more slowly than at any time since the 1930's. It estimates that our workforce will grow by just one percent in the 1990. Phasing out the earnings limit will help reverse this dangerous trend.

The Social Security Administration estimates that $ 9 would result in additional outlays of $500 million in the first year, and $6.6 billion over five years. However, those projections do not take into account the full economic picture. Under its long-term 75 years projections, SSA estimates that our proposal would cost only .01 percent of taxable payroll; a negligible amount.

Neither estimate includes higher revenues which will result from a larger workforce earning higher wages and, therefore, paying additional taxes. In fact, many believe that there would be a "feedback" in revenues to the Treasury ranging from 20 to 40 percent of the projected outlay increase. If just a small number of beneficiaries in the above mentioned age group return to work, or continue working without the earnings limit, the amount of higher federal revenues could possibly render the proposal budget neutral.

Repealing the earnings test is the right thing to do, for the woman in Ridgeland and thousands of other senior Mississippians just like her facing the same dilemma.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MSU remarks on ASRM disturb Waveland engineer

To the Editor,

When I read Mississippi State University's position statements concerning ASRM testing at Stennis Space Center, several things came to mind. For example: Vice President for Research, Ralph E. Power, said the university is satisfied with the steps NASA has taken to make sure the tests are safe and "confident that the air quality permitting process being carried out by the Mississippi Department of Environmental Quality will ensure this occurs."

I had to wonder: Just how can a permit make sure the tests are safe? What can it possibly say that could alter the effects of an after-the-fact occurrence such as the spewing of hundreds of tons of HCl and aluminum oxide into the air which could then be whisked away by some freakish down-draft, temperature inversion and/or focusing?

In the Thursday Sun Herald, referring to the devastation wreaked on Huntsville, Ala. on Wednesday, the statement is made: "Seventeen people died Wednesday in Huntsville, Ala., when a tornado packing 250 mph winds struck virtually without warning, laying waste to a wide swath of the city."

This happened in and at the very hub of the epitome of modern space technology! And, I understand that the meteorological data to be relied upon at Stennis will come from a station in Jackson.

Incidentally, when I had responsibility for acceptance testing the S-IC stage at the Mississippi Test Facility (now SSC), we had a U.S. weather station on-site. Sometimes, because of atmospheric conditions, the safety officer would order me to hold and, usually within minutes, conditions would change so that we could fire.

As often as not, within a short time after the test, conditions would change to the extent that we couldn't have fired.

The big difference is: in those days we were concerned about acoustics—knocking out shopping center windows in Picayune or Bay St. Louis, or the like—but once the firing was over, the sound source was dead and that was that. Not so with the vapors that will charge the atmosphere from the ASRM static firings. They are very capable of becoming the little white clouds (and black clouds) that cry pure hydrochloric acid rain.

Getting back to the NASA press conference attended by Dr. Zacharias and Dr. Power, another disturbing statement to me was one attributed to Dr. Zacharias as follows: Having just cited Dr. Esher and Mr. Bradshaw, Dr. Zacharias continued: "Anyone who wishes to be taken seriously as a scientist must submit that claim for scientific verification."

Yet, Dr. Power then stated: "NASA officials recently reviewed the program with six MSU scientists that have backgrounds appropriate to evaluate these concerns. While this meeting did not represent a comprehensive evaluation of the environmental impact of advanced solid rocket motor testing" (which is the crux of the entire issue) "the MSU group had no recommendation for action which should be taken in the future other than those already planned."

I'm not a scientist, I'm only an engineer, but I can readily detect a gross departure from what Dr. Zacharias defined as something that should be taken seriously, scientifically speaking. With nine people meeting for "several hours" in a meeting that has been described as not having represented a comprehensive evaluation, how on earth could this have been given any scientific credence?

It is not heartening to learn from Dr. Power's position paper that: "In order to more fully evaluate this monitoring program and other environmental issues, a group of scientists from the University of Mississippi, the University of Southern Mississippi and Jackson State University are joining with MSU scientists to form a research team. It is anticipated that the activities of this team will be a tremendous benefit in implementation of an environmentally safe Advanced Solid Rocket Motor Testing Program."

This statement makes the issuing of a permit a foregone conclusion; we on the Coast and around the test site in Mississippi and Louisiana are going to be guinea pigs. The Dr. Ralph E. Power statement all but proclaims it.

As an engineer, I do not, and neither do true scientists, proceed on blind trust. I didn't always agree with President Reagan, but one thing he kept saying about the Russians seems absolutely appropriate in this case: "Trust, but verify."

In closing I would like to state one other thing, in all the times that I listened to Dr. Esher and Mr. Bradshaw speak, never once did I hear either of them say that they were representing MSU in their views. They have merely been expressing their views as American citizens, exercising their freedom of speech.

If there is the implication that these scientists, of all people, are creating some kind of problem by exercising this constitutional right, then we have a much more serious problem here than just the testing of an inanimate object.

Teach deer to fear humans so they can live

Dear Editor,

Many of my fellow homeowners in Diamondhead are very proud of the wildlife found in our community; rabbits squirrels and deer abound. Many homeowners have salt licks for the deer and put out grain to coach these animals near.

I've heard many of my neighbors brag about how gentle and unafraid the deer are. "Why you can walk right up to them."

I would like to use this newspaper to stay stop, stop, stop! If you see a deer in your backyard, clap your hands, yell, make a loud noise to make the deer run away. Teach them to fear the sight and smell of humans, so they won't walk right up to a man with a gun.

Why? you say, Diamondhead is a sanctuary; all creatures are safe within its borders. Yes, but many people don't realize that there is a large strip of land between those borders that is not a part of Diamondhead and therefore a sanctuary to nothing.

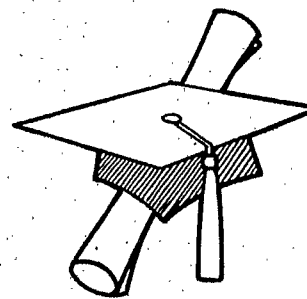

The property south of I-10 to Akoko and west of the runway to the river is not owned by Diamondhead and is not under Diamondhead Property Owners jurisdiction. Our security people are practically helpless. They can not go past Akoko, they can stop people without a Diamondhead sticker from entering the area; but they have to let the owners or 'friends' of the owners go.

The deer cross the interstate and travel down to the river. I saw a large buck just last week. He stopped and looked at me, then went on his way. He's probably dead now.

Sincerely,
Jo Ann Vaz

SHOPPING UP A STORM

By Katy McGuire
Caire

Are your tastebuds turning towards a dinner of steak and potatoes after all the fancy feasting at Thanksgiving? If so, hurry over to Jitney Jungle, where the post-holiday feature at the meat counter is top sirloin!

Don't forget to pick up a bag of the Russett potatoes on special along the way! If you like your steak rare or medium, look for a cut 1 1/2 to 2 inches thick; if you prefer it well done, a thinner one, of course.

You may wish to broil your steak, or grill it, or broil it, that's a matter of choice. I like to heat a heavy cast iron skillet all but smoking hot, toss the steak in, sear it on one side, then turn it on the other—and slather it with melted butter and seasonings.

Red meat, experts tell us, is still just about the best source of iron—just select leaner cuts, trim the fat and so on for health's sake. And if dietary restrictions limit butter, pick up an avocado from National and to cut cholesterol, try:

AVOCADO BUTTER FOR STEAK

1 ripe avocado
2 green onions, chopped
1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley
2 Tblsp. fresh lime or lemon juice

Pinch cayenne
Process all ingredients in food processor, or mash well, until smooth. Cook steak your way, and serve with the butter—I like to add a small can (4 oz.) of chopped green chilies, drained, to this butter, or else dashes (generous dashes and splashes) of hot pepper sauce at times.

You might want to pick up some of that ever-reliable standby, ground beef, at savings at Delchamps and stir up a quick:

SKILLET MEAT LOAF
1 lb. ground beef
2 Tblsp. chopped bell (green) pepper
1/4 cup chopped onion

2 Tblsp. chopped celery
2 cups corn flakes
1 egg, slightly beaten
1 tsp. salt
1 Tblsp. tomato catsup
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1/4 tsp. prepared mustard
1 Tblsp. oil

Combine all ingredients except the oil, and mix thoroughly. Heat the oil in an 8-inch skillet. Pack the meat mixture in firmly, cover, and cook over low heat for 20 minutes, or until nicely browned on the bottom. Turn out onto a hot platter and serve at once. (Four servings.)
—from Money-Saving Recipe Ideas, Bonomo Publications

With onions still a super-bargain at Winn-Dixie, I'm planning to stir up some:

ONION SOUP
(Everybody and his brother and sister has a "super" recipe for onion soup, and will tolerate no other, it seems. Some insist you must cook the onions till dark brown; others, barely brown.

Some want it plain, others add sherry, and I even know one cook who adds champagne—the plutocrat! Why waste the bubbly on soup!

This is the way I like to make:

ONION SOUP
4 large onions, sliced thin
2 Tblsp. butter
2 cans beef broth (unless you have some homemade on hand)
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
Gruyere or Parmesan cheese, grated, as desired
Toasted rounds of French bread or rolls

Saute the onions in butter until translucent, but not brown, stirring with a wooden spoon to prevent burning or over-browning. Cook over low heat just until light brown, remember.

Add the beef broth, diluted with water as needed, add the seasonings, and simmer for 20 minutes or so. Place a toasted round of the bread in the bottom of a soup bowl, pour the soup over, and blanket with the grated cheese. If you have oven-proof bowls, so much the better; use these, and run under the broiler for a minute or so, till the cheese gets all delightfully gooey. (A splash of sherry wine enhances the flavor.)

GOOD FOOD BUYS

Follow instructions when using packaged foods

While the new food packaging techniques offer a great variety in convenience foods, many shoppers are finding the whole thing confusing.

What's the best way to handle these new products? First, read the label. That way you know exactly how to store and serve a particular product.

Fresh prepared, refrigerated foods. As the designation implies, these foods must be refrigerated. What is different, though, is that the preparation of many of these products allows them to be refrigerated for longer periods than consumers are used to—sometimes up to four weeks.

The longer storage times are due to vacuum packaging or modified atmosphere packaging. MAP, where oxygen in the package is mixed with a gas (usually carbon dioxide and/or nitrogen) that slows spoilage, fermentation and the growth of harmful bacteria.

You may already have seen some of these products—the vacuum-packed meat, for instance, that looks somewhat brown. Oxygen makes the meat have a bright red color when the package is opened to air. Products in MAP packaging now run the gamut from raw pork tenderloin to fully cooked roast chicken, tuna spreads and tortellini. Some require additional cooking or heating before serving. Always check the label.

Sous vide: It's hard to imagine boiling a plastic bag containing poached salmon in dill sauce and having your dinner taste fresh, but that's what the sous vide process is designed to do.

Literally, "sous vide" is French for "under vacuum." Fresh raw ingredients or partially-cooked ingredients are vacuum sealed in a plastic pouch. The pouch is heat-processed, the quick-chilled and distributed under refrigeration.

Sous vide products must be kept refrigerated. Like other vacuum-packed products, sous vide products will last three to four weeks refrigerated. To serve, simply heat the bag in boiling water.

Shelf-stable products: This new packaging uses plastic containers instead of metal cans or glass jars, so, instead of opening a can of soup, pouring it into a pan and heating it, now you can pull a plastic soup package off the shelf and pop it into the microwave.

The labels on these plastic containers don't call for refrigeration. And, assuming there are no breaks or tears in the package, these products should maintain top quality for over a year.

So what's a confused consumer to do? According to Susan Templin, the home economist in charge of USDA's Meat and Poultry Hotline:

1. Read the label. Handling and cooking procedures may be different for every product, and only proper handling can ensure product safety.

2. Look for a time-temperature indicator. Some of the new products have one. It's usually a strip or dot that changes color if the product is past its expiration date or has been held at an improper, above-refrigeration temperature.

3. Check the "use by" and "sell by" date stamped on the package. You take a chance when you use old products.

LAUBACH PROFILED

International literacy pioneer Dr. Frank Laubach, who is credited with teaching millions of people throughout the world to read, is the subject of a one-hour documentary airing at 6 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 26 on Mississippi ETV.

"Each One Teach One" focuses on the lifelong literacy efforts of the late Dr. Laubach, who conducted "literacy safaris" around the world and helped develop reading lessons in 103 countries and 314 languages.

Viewers will travel to Inaja de Negrete, Mexico, and surrounding rancheros, to see the Laubach method in action. Closer to home, inmates in a Pennsylvania prison learn to read, and residents of rural Georgia are testaments to the success of Dr. Laubach's literacy programs.

"Dr. Frank Laubach's life and work were great gifts to the cause of literacy," said First Lady Barbara Bush. "Not just for Americans but for so many people throughout the world."
